Max Baer and Barney Ross were two of the most successful boxers of their era. Baer was the world heavyweight champion from 1934 to 1935, and Ross was the world welterweight champion from 1933 to 1935. Both men were known for their aggressive fighting styles and their ability to take a punch. Their rivalry was one of the most heated in boxing history, and their fights were always eagerly anticipated by fans.

Max Baer: The Heavyweight Champion

Max Baer was born in Omaha, Nebraska, in 1909. He began boxing as a teenager, and quickly rose through the ranks. In 1934, he challenged Primo Carnera for the world heavyweight championship. Baer won the fight in a stunning upset, knocking out Carnera in the 11th round. Baer's victory made him the first Jewish heavyweight champion in history.

Baer's reign as champion was short-lived. In 1935, he lost the title to James J. Braddock in another upset. Baer continued to fight for several more years, but he never regained the heavyweight championship.

Barney Ross: The Welterweight Champion

Barney Ross was born in Chicago, Illinois, in 1909. He began boxing as a teenager, and quickly rose through the ranks. In 1933, he challenged Tony Canzoneri for the world welterweight championship. Ross won the fight in a close decision, becoming the first Jewish welterweight champion in history.

Ross's reign as champion was more successful than Baer's. He successfully defended his title seven times, before losing to Henry Armstrong in 1938. Ross continued to fight for several more years, but he never regained the welterweight championship.

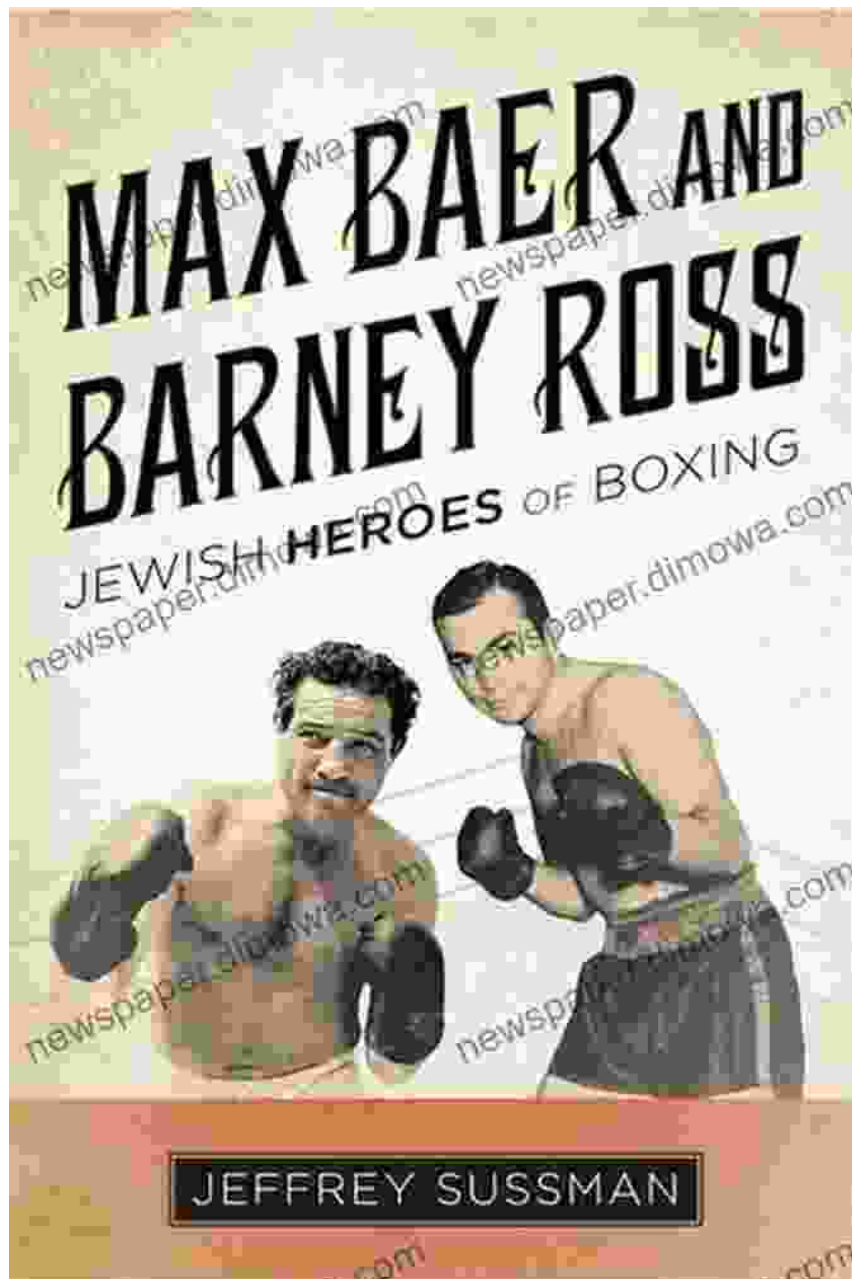

The Rivalry

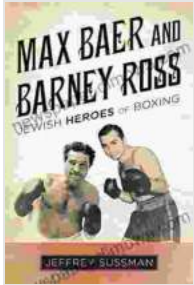

Baer and Ross were two of the most popular boxers of their era. Their rivalry was one of the most heated in boxing history. The two men fought three times, with each man winning once. Their first fight, in 1933, was a close decision in favor of Baer. Their second fight, in 1934, was a more decisive victory for Baer. Their third and final fight, in 1935, was a close decision in favor of Ross.

The rivalry between Baer and Ross was more than just a boxing rivalry. The two men were also personal rivals. They often traded insults in the press, and they even came to blows on one occasion. Their rivalry was finally resolved in 1955, when they were both inducted into the International Boxing Hall of Fame.

The Legacy

Max Baer and Barney Ross were two of the greatest boxers of their era. They were both aggressive fighters who were known for their ability to take a punch. Their rivalry was one of the most heated in boxing history, and their fights were always eagerly anticipated by fans. Baer and Ross were both inducted into the International Boxing Hall of Fame, and their legacies will continue to endure for generations to come.
